Rhinoceros are large mammals. They are one of the largest land mammals on earth. Rhinoceros are often called rhinos for short. The word “rhinoceros” comes from Ancient Greek. The word “rhino” means “a nose” and the word “ceros” means “a horn”.

Rhinos have lived on this planet for millions of years. Rhinoceros are an endangered species, native to Africa, Indonesia and Malaysia. There are 5 different types of rhinos: two African species and three Asian species.

Black rhinos and white rhinos are native to Africa and the Indian rhino, Javan rhino and Sumatran rhino are native to Southern Asia. Black rhinoceros are the smallest African species of rhinos. They have two horns sometimes three. Black rhinos live in Namibia and along the coast of East Africa. A black rhino’s habitat is deserts, savannahs and grasslands.

Black rhinos are endangered. There are around 5,000 black rhinos left in the world. There are many differences between black rhinos and white rhinos. The greatest difference is the shape of their lips. The black rhino has a curved top lip and the white rhino has a square shaped lip.

White rhinos are the world’s second largest land mammal and the largest species of rhino. The elephant is the largest land mammal.

White rhino live in savannahs and grasslands along the coast of East Africa and also in Namibia. White rhinos aren’t white at all, they are actually grey. They have two front horns. They are also endangered. There are about 17,500 white rhinos left in the world.
